KITCHENS AND BATHROOMS

Crockery on display

This architectural kitchen illustrates the growing popularity of glass-fronted cupboards, which allows crockery, pottery, artwork and fine crystal to be kept on display while softening the look of the room. It was designed for Wentworth Place in Dallas by Clive Christian Furniture Co in collaboration with interior designer Heather Hungeling. ### The walk-in pantry

Working alongside the interiors studio Forbes Rix, Woodstock Furniture has created a bright and spacious multipurpose utility area. Painting the walls, joinery and larder cupboard in bold colours and laying geometric floor tiles makes the space feel separate from the more muted industrial-style kitchen next door. ### Bold contrasts

Mixing materials and contrasting colours can create a striking effect in period properties in which the traditional framework may need to be adapted to suit modern needs. This project in London by HAM Interiors, featuring a kitchen by Extreme Design, is a good example of how to mix dark and light elements and introduce warmth through metals. ## TREND WATCH

Five looks for 2021 to have on your radar when updating your kitchen

Back to white

Once deemed boring and clinical, the all-white handleless kitchen has made a strong comeback and can work especially well in period properties, balancing the characterful and often less functional elements and shapes. This all-white kitchen designed by Stuart Frazer features Siematic units that help the kitchen area to feel more airy and spacious. ### The kitchen office

Wren's 'Infinity Plus Shaker' kitchen has been used to create this stylish home office, which leads off from the kitchen. The built-in desk has been painted in the same trendy green as the rest of the kitchen joinery to unify the two areas. The same hue is picked up by the green and white checkerboard flooring.
